V. W. MacAndrew, a newcomer to the class, has come out top with Trivia after one of the finest season's racing the "twelves" have ever experienced. And so the 1937 season came to a close in British waters, and with America building up a similar class the future looks very bright for the "twelves", as it should, for they are lovely little ships, large enough to give a great deal of comfort aboard, and yet small enough to be tacked and gybed frequently, so giving the fun of sailing a quick and responsive racer, and this with their seaworthiness is largely responsible for the ever increasing popularity of the "twelves".
